

ABSTRACT

Provided are methods for reducing transfer of fluid between liquid samples subject to consecutive instrument controlled filter sampling. Transfer of fluid between subsequent samples is reduced by decontaminating surfaces of the instrument. The methods reduce sample contamination so that any remaining unused sample may be subject to diagnostic analysis without less concern that the outcome will be the result of sample cross-contamination.